Nancy Wynne Tells Miss Strawbridge Is Visiting in Newport—The Thomas Newhalls to Return From Europe—Miss Anne H. Tounsend to Make Debut

ANITA, or Neo, Strawbridge is having a lovely time this summer. She is staying up in Newport with her cousins, Mr. Ned Berwind and Miss Julia Berwind. The family is in mourning, you know, so there is not much entertaining, but they will not let "Neo" stay in mourning long, and she is therefore accepting invitations and going about quite a bit. Mr. Berwind, who died about a year ago, you remember, and Neo's grandmother, the late Mrs. Charles Berwind, died about three months ago.

Mrs. Bob Strawbridge, Neo's mother, was Miss Anita Berwind, a sister of Frederick Berwind, who first married Charlie Gilpin and later, one of the Harjes and lives now in Paris. Another sister married a German baron, but has been divorced from him since the war. Mrs. Strawbridge is considered the most beautiful of the three sisters, but I find it hard to say which all three are most beautiful. They are cousins of the Harry Berwinds, of this city. Mrs. Strawbridge has gone up to Narragansett for the polo. Her husband and son are both devoted players, you know, and polo is decidedly the thing these two weeks in Narragansett.

THE Thomas Newhalls are scheduled to be on their way home from Europe this week, and I for one will be glad to see Mrs. Newhall again. She is so attractive and wears such wonderful After being in Paris, she will have more wonderful ones than ever. The Newhalls have a delightful place at Ithan, with a sunken garden and pool. I think the small pools on the various places are too charming for anything. And the bird baths! Have you watched the birds bathing? I saw a large blackbird the other day perched on one side of the concrete basin in the garden and a tiny wren on the other. The wren was looking severely at the blackbird, with its wings tucked and its tail feathers fanned. The blackbird hesitated a moment and then took a chance and made a leap into the basin with such a splash that the wren was all covered with water. Once in, that blackbird took one of the most thorough baths I ever saw and would not get out till he was good and ready.

SPEAKING of the Tom Newhalls reminds me that the Ann Newhall was making a debutante in their family this year. Not a daughter, but a niece, for Anne Tounsend, daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Tounsend, lives with them, you know. Mrs. Dan Newhall was Ellen Godfrey and Mrs. Ralph Tounsend was her sister, Daisy Godfrey, quite one the handsomest women Philadelphia ever had to boast of. She and her husband died within a few months of each other, leaving Anne an orphan at an early age. She is a very attractive girl, and will doubtless have a number of parties given in her honor during the season. She has been at boarding school in Virginia for several years, but I am told her relatives have decided to introduce her this season.

The Ann Newhall lives out at Merion, Tom, Dan, Mrs. O'Brien and Mrs. Strawbridge are the children of the late Daniel Newhall, who was one of the officials of the Pennsylvania Railroad and one of the famous Newhall writers of more than a quarter of a century ago. Mr. Dan Newhall was the only member of the family to move to the Main Line, the others all remaining about Germantown and Chestnut Hill. Mr. Charles Newhall, who is living now in New York City and whose first wife was Miss Phoebe Willing, is the sole survivor of that family of brothers.

THE family decided to go to the movies for the early performance, as the nurse was out for the afternoon, and Ellen could not be put to bed and left alone in the apartment. It was a very solemn movie, even the elders in the party felt a bit depressed, and, somehow, the "funny" was not especially mirth-provoking—altogether, it was a weary evening. As they were walking home and talking things over after the show, Ellen gave her opinion, too. She is eight years old and has opinions, and said she: "When I was little, that picture would have made me cry."
